

Treasury Department,

BUREAU OF THE MINT,

Washington, D. C., September 25, 1885.

Sir:

As there is such a surplus of cents and five-cent pieces in the vaults of the Treasury it will not be desirable to resume their coinage.

On conferring with other Treasury officials it seems that there is no requirement on the part of the Mint to keep on hand subsidiary coin for distribution. This distribution is properly in the hands of the Treasury Department, and applicants for small subsidiary coin should be referred to the Subtreasury in your city.

Hon. Daniel M. Fox,
Superintendent Mint,
Philadelphia

Very respectfully,
Just Winball
Director

NARA RG104, Entry 1, Box 135

Treasury Department,
Bureau of the Mint,
Washington, D.C.,
September 25, 1885

Sir:

As there is such a surplus of cents and five-cent pieces in the vaults of the Treasury it will not be desirable to resume their coinage.

On conferring with other Treasury officials it seems that there is no requirement on the part of the Mint to keep on hand subsidiary coin for distribution. This distribution is properly in the hands of the Treasury Department, and applicants for small subsidiary coin should be referred to the Subtreasury in your city.

Very respectfully,
Jas. P. Kimball
Director

Hon. Daniel M. Fox,
Superintendent Mint,
Philadelphia